

BRITISH DIVIDE OVER AMNESTY

Row Caused in Discussion of Granting Freedom
to All Prisoners

LONDON, Jan. 28.—Disension has broken out in the British cabinet over the advisability of extending royal amnesty to the remaining Sinn Féin prisoners detained in English jails. They number about eighty and were tried and sentenced during the Sinn Féin agitations in this country.

The home secretary, Edward Shortt, contends that the prisoners should not be released. He argues that the Sinn Féin were residents of Britain, that their crimes were committed on English soil and that they were committed to English jails by English courts. Consequently, he maintains, they were not eligible to general amnesty.

The opposition is headed by Colonial Secretary Winston Churchill and Sir Hamar Greenwood, chief secretary for Ireland—a post that will soon be abolished. Both these officials favor including the 80 prisoners in a new grant of amnesty by King George. They argue that such action would strengthen the moderate faction at Dublin headed by Michael Collins and Arthur Griffith and make more cordial the relations between the London government and the Irish provisional government.

There are indications that the Churchill-Greenwood faction is winning its point and that a decision will be announced publicly soon.
